

LAST EDITION.

EIGHT PAGES.

THE PEOPLE'S SIDE.

De Lancy Nicoll Summing Up in
Buchanan's Case.

Pays a High Tribute to Mr. Well-
man's Ability.

The District-Attorney's Eloquent
Argument Against the Accused.

The case of Dr. Robert Weisford Buchanan is the hands of the prosecutor, the judge and the jury today. Each in turn will discuss his case.

The last word had been said for him, so far as this trial for poisoning his wife to death is concerned, yesterday.

His chief of counsel, Charles W. Brooke, had said in one of the most powerful pleas ever addressed to a jury. He had devoted six hours and fifteen minutes to a careful exposure of every supposed weakness of the evidence presented by the prosecution against Buchanan.

Never once did the old pleader, with thirty-seven years' experience before the bar behind him, become passionate. His oratory flowed with rhythmic music and his voice never rising above the conversational.

The address was full of epigram, and many times rose to the quality of blank verse. It was the best that any man could do with the material at hand.

De Lancy Nicoll replied to any before an audience limited in its number only by the limits of the chamber of Part III of the court of General Sessions, where Recorder Smyth began the trial on March 20 when he was sitting regularly in March 20 of the court.

Mr. Nicoll is not an orator, but he is an analytical debater, and his arguments are based on the most careful reasoning.

The audience today, as yesterday, included many women, several of whom had been faithful in their attendance on the trial as the learned counsel for the defense of the forces of the district-attorney's office.

Among the latter was one young woman with a white face, a small, marble brow and great dark eyes that were veiled by a glass. No one seems to know her.

Another is a square-jawed woman with strong features—such a woman as would probably be classed as strong-minded, or at least as a true student. She is a nurse and wears her light blue cap tilted a little forward over her gray eyes.

Mr. Buchanan was not bowed down and hunched under the weight of his life yesterday, but he was a little stiff and awkward. He was a little stiff and awkward. He was a little stiff and awkward.

Mr. Nicoll began by replying briefly to the statement by Mr. Brooke of the prosecution. He said:

LAST EDITION.

EIGHT PAGES.

THE PEOPLE'S SIDE.

De Lancy Nicoll Summing Up in
Buchanan's Case.

Pays a High Tribute to Mr. Well-
man's Ability.

The District-Attorney's Eloquent
Argument Against the Accused.

The case of Dr. Robert Weisford Buchanan is the hands of the prosecutor, the judge and the jury today. Each in turn will discuss his case.

The last word had been said for him, so far as this trial for poisoning his wife to death is concerned, yesterday.

His chief of counsel, Charles W. Brooke, had said in one of the most powerful pleas ever addressed to a jury. He had devoted six hours and fifteen minutes to a careful exposure of every supposed weakness of the evidence presented by the prosecution against Buchanan.

Never once did the old pleader, with thirty-seven years' experience before the bar behind him, become passionate. His oratory flowed with rhythmic music and his voice never rising above the conversational.

The address was full of epigram, and many times rose to the quality of blank verse. It was the best that any man could do with the material at hand.

De Lancy Nicoll replied to any before an audience limited in its number only by the limits of the chamber of Part III of the court of General Sessions, where Recorder Smyth began the trial on March 20 when he was sitting regularly in March 20 of the court.

Mr. Nicoll is not an orator, but he is an analytical debater, and his arguments are based on the most careful reasoning.

The audience today, as yesterday, included many women, several of whom had been faithful in their attendance on the trial as the learned counsel for the defense of the forces of the district-attorney's office.

Among the latter was one young woman with a white face, a small, marble brow and great dark eyes that were veiled by a glass. No one seems to know her.

Another is a square-jawed woman with strong features—such a woman as would probably be classed as strong-minded, or at least as a true student. She is a nurse and wears her light blue cap tilted a little forward over her gray eyes.

Mr. Buchanan was not bowed down and hunched under the weight of his life yesterday, but he was a little stiff and awkward. He was a little stiff and awkward. He was a little stiff and awkward.

Mr. Nicoll began by replying briefly to the statement by Mr. Brooke of the prosecution. He said:

FIRST OF THE FLEET. RIPE RECESS PLUMS.

The Dolphin Beats All the Vessels
Into Port.

The Dimitri Donskoi Arrives in the Lower Bay.

Fog Interferes with the View of the Arrivals.

SPRING LAKE, N. J., April 25.—Twenty-three vessels were off Spring Lake at 11:40 A. M., bound north.

NAVY SINK HIGHLANDS, N. J., April 25.—The fleet was sighted at 12:25 P. M.

FORT HAMILTON, April 25.—The first of the great fleet to arrive from Hampton Roads was the Dolphin, with Secretary Herbert on board.

The Dolphin passed Sandy Hook at 0:45 A. M.

Closely following in her wake was the Russian man-of-war Dimitri Donskoi, the flagship of the Russian fleet.

The Dimitri Donskoi came direct from Russia, and had on board Vice-Admiral Kornakoff, commander-in-chief of the Russian fleet.

As she passed the Hook she saluted the Secretary of the Navy's flag on the Dolphin, the latter promptly acknowledging the courtesy.

The Dimitri Donskoi also exchanged salutes with the outward bound United States monitor Manigault.

All the forts in the Narrows answered in turn the salutes of the Russian flagship.

Capt. Rodgers, Supervisor of the Harbor, escorted the Russian to the position he will occupy in the lower bay until the fleet passes up the river. She then dropped anchor.

Fog Interferes with the View.
Lowering clouds hung over the bay at noon, threatening heavy rain.

The haze was deepening into dense fog and the prospects for enjoying a view of the fleet were not promising.

The fleet was seen in the distance, but the fog was so thick that the details were not visible.

The fleet was seen in the distance, but the fog was so thick that the details were not visible.

The fleet was seen in the distance, but the fog was so thick that the details were not visible.

The fleet was seen in the distance, but the fog was so thick that the details were not visible.

The fleet was seen in the distance, but the fog was so thick that the details were not visible.

The fleet was seen in the distance, but the fog was so thick that the details were not visible.

The fleet was seen in the distance, but the fog was so thick that the details were not visible.

OLIVER TWIST UP TO DATE.

The Cashier and the Safe.

John M. Wiley, of New York, to Be Consul at Bordeaux.

New Associate Justice for the Supreme Court of Arizona.

WASHINGTON, April 25.—The following appointments were announced today at the White House:

L. F. MCKINNEY, of New Hampshire, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Colombia.

THOMAS L. THOMPSON, of California, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Brazil.

GEORGE WILLIAM CARUTH, of Arkansas, to be Minister Resident and Consul General of the United States to Portugal.

JOHN M. WILEY, of New York, to be Consul of the United States at Bordeaux.

HARVEY MYERS, of Kentucky, to be a Commissioner from Kentucky on the World's Columbian Commission.

J. C. SANDERS, of Georgia, to be an alternate Commissioner from Georgia on the World's Columbian Commission.

OWEN T. ROUSE, of Arizona Territory, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Arizona.

To be Attorneys of the United States: WILLIAM E. SHUTT, for the Southern District of Illinois; JOHN W. JUD, for the Territory of Utah.

To be Marshals of the United States: RICHARD C. WARE for the Western District of Texas; GEORGE M. HUMPHREY for the District of Nevada.

John M. Wiley, now Consul at Bordeaux, is of Buffalo and is ex-congressman of the thirty-third district.

His marriage at Indianapolis, April 15, 1900, to the daughter of an ex-treasurer of Indiana, was an event of much social as well as political importance.

Mr. Wiley is a member of the state democratic committee and a level-headed friend of Mr. Cleveland.

He owns an interest in the Tremont House, Boston, an orange plantation in Florida and a stock farm at East Aurora, near Buffalo.

The identity of the man who is alleged to have killed Goldstein, a peddler, is Lena Jacobs and Julia Moskowski.

Lena Jacobs and Julia Moskowski, an ex-treasurer of Indiana, was an event of much social as well as political importance.

Mr. Wiley is a member of the state democratic committee and a level-headed friend of Mr. Cleveland.

He owns an interest in the Tremont House, Boston, an orange plantation in Florida and a stock farm at East Aurora, near Buffalo.

The identity of the man who is alleged to have killed Goldstein, a peddler, is Lena Jacobs and Julia Moskowski.

LAST EDITION.

EIGHT PAGES.

CARAVELS AT ANCHOR.

Their Progress Up the River
Watched by Thousands.

Groed in the Narrows by the Guns of the Forts.

The Diminutive Vessels Arouse Unlimited Enthusiasm.

The caravel's Santa Maria, Nina and Pinta are the last of the old sailing ships to be seen during the Naval Review in the Narrows, opposite Ninety-sixth street.

Their progress up the bay and river this morning was watched by thousands, and the little fleet was received with honor as it entered the harbor and passed up into the river.

Nothing daunted by the chilly atmosphere and the slow, discouraging drift of rain, hundreds of people from New York and Brooklyn, with lunch baskets and rain weather paraphernalia, went to Fort Hamilton this morning to witness the entrance into the harbor of the counterparts of the fleet with which Columbus discovered the new world.

The bluff for a half mile below the promontory from which the big guns belch forth their fiery, smoky welcome was lined with people at an early hour.

They witnessed a most unusual sight, even before the infant Isabella, the flagship of the Spanish fleet, had passed the Narrows.

The harbor was alive with small official craft creating the waters of fishermen and lotteries and lavatory boats outlining the respective post lines for the international squadrons to occupy while at anchor before going up to the reviewing position.

At 10:15 the infant Isabella, with the caravel Santa Maria in tow, passed slowly up through the Narrows.

The appearance of the caravels with the caravel in tow was signified by a simultaneous cannonade from Fort Hamilton and Wardworn.

A single salute of twenty-one guns was fired from the mainmast of the infant Isabella, while the caravels were over the water from Fort Hamilton.

Hundreds of glasses were leveled at the quaint little ship that tossed on the swell amid the formidable looking standard and threatened to upset the caravel at frequent intervals.

The fleet, though not all that could be desired, was sufficient to show through the glasses the outlines and dimensions of the ship, which looked very much like a toy.

None but an intrepid navigator whose life was concerned to the accomplishment of an unparaded achievement as was that of Columbus, would have ventured beyond the safe haven of port in such a vessel. It seemed as if even the occasional highness of the lower bay might be sufficient to send it to Davy Jones's locker.

Five hundred yards in the rear was the warship Reina Regenta with the Nina, which is almost the counterpart of the Santa Maria.

The Nina Regenta, which is almost the counterpart of the Santa Maria, was the last of the old sailing ships to be seen during the Naval Review in the Narrows, opposite Ninety-sixth street.

Their progress up the bay and river this morning was watched by thousands, and the little fleet was received with honor as it entered the harbor and passed up into the river.

Nothing daunted by the chilly atmosphere and the slow, discouraging drift of rain, hundreds of people from New York and Brooklyn, with lunch baskets and rain weather paraphernalia, went to Fort Hamilton this morning to witness the entrance into the harbor of the counterparts of the fleet with which Columbus discovered the new world.

WHO KILLED GOLDSTEIN? COST OF WATER-SHED RAIDS. WAITERS WAITING ANSWERS.

Lena Jacobs and Julia Moskowski Remanded at the Tombs.

Board of Estimate Appropriated $50,000 To-Day.

Proprietors Must To-Day Grant or Refuse Demands.

Firm Belief that They Know the Murderer of the Young Man.

Health Board Wants Six Ambulances Fitted Out.

Victories Won at Several Well-Known Establishments.

The first appropriation under the law providing for the purification of the water supply was made today by the Board of Estimate and Appropriation.

The Board of Health laid no time in asking for an appropriation under the law recently passed by the Legislature authorizing the appropriation of $50,000 to guard against cholera.

The Board asked for $10,000 to purchase and fit out six ambulances, three disinfecting machines and to pay for the services of laborers and inspectors.

The Controller said he did not know whether the bill had been signed by the Governor, and the matter was laid over.

Another meeting will be held at New York Chamber of Commerce to-night.

Four Prisoners Held for Trial by the Grand Jury.

STAPLETON, S. I., April 25.—Matthew Wais, Jack Bowers, William Stannard and Thomas Welsh, who are supposed to have been implicated in the striking of Frank Schroeder, a soldier, at Fort Warburton, were bound over by Justice Kaufman for the grand jury.

He was arrested in the afternoon at 10:30 on a charge of night burglary at 111 Columbia street, where he was found with a woman and a child.

Three Of with the Wagon.

John Adams, aged thirty, a member of 1771 Columbia street, was held in $500 bail by Justice McKenna in the City Hall Court today.

He was arrested in the afternoon at 10:30 on a charge of night burglary at 111 Columbia street, where he was found with a woman and a child.